was sure he saw the two "sawbucks" when the Captain took them from the cash drawer.

Welss said he fixed the time of one visit of Levy to Kuenstler Halle as March I because it was the day that two of Krumm's bartenders were arraigned in court for violating the Excise laws.

"Capt. Krumm introduced me to Levy and Hunt. He was fooling with them, and introduced me to them by my fake name, "Tulpenstengel." said Weiss of that first visit, March I. He could not swear whether Krumm put the $20 in his pocket or not. They talked fifteen minutes, and then "shook hands, good-by."

The concert hall was opened unlawfully March 8, and the next visit of the two detectives was Monday, March 13. Hennie was sure that there was another $20 out of the cash drawer, another "great American handshake," and the detectives left.

"The next visit was Monday, March 19, I remember that it was a week after the last visit." Mr. Wellman said that all that remained now was the approval of the President.

As previously stated in "The Evening World," it is probable that the approval of President Martin will be withheld antil after a verdict is rendered in the case of ex-Ward Man Levy, now on trial in General Sessions for bribery.

President Martin refused to make any satisfactory or intelligent answers to two or three civil questions propounded to find the concerts after this little byplay. "Miss Krumm, do you see Mr. Levy in Coort"!

So softly! So crafilly! Mr. Osborne blustered a little and told the witness to step down and "look at these three men and see which is Levy."

"Look at everybody in the court-room, if necessary," said Judge Martine.

The east side beauty drew close up to the rail and at a 20-inch range gazed at the Levys, Abe's clerk, a messenger boy and three handsome rportrs.

Then she said she thought that was the man, indicating the mar on trial. Whereat Abe Levy got another young fellow to stand un beside the accused.

Miss Krumm was evidently puzzled, but she smiled so sweetly that even Coborne forgave her when she said that these two were so much alike that she really could not swear which was sent from the room, and that ended the only pretty episode of this trial so replete with undestrable characters.

Withelm Vonalin was more successful. He was an extra walter at Knenstier Halle in March, was out of work, but was hanging around the place March 18, He saw Levy when he called.
